tional economic and other issues and embodying decisions to promote South-South cooperation. India articulated the position of the G-15 countries on the evolution of a consensus to ensure that development is brought at the centre of international attention and that modalities were found to place the area of international cooperation for economic development at the centre of the multilateral agenda. The other Heads of State/ Government endorsed this point of view. The G-15 leaders also expressed their willingness to enter into a dialogue with the industrialised countries. The basic principles of this enhanced cooperation have been spelt out in the Joint Communique.
